Robert Grant, whom the book reading public knows as a clever author, but who is known in Boston as a prebate judge as well, is a hard-working lawyer on the shady side of 40, but apparently younger. His pea and his bleycle consume almost equally his leisure intervals.

M. Sauria, who invented matches made of chlorate of potnesium, phosphorus and supplur, has just died. The vectran existing who was granted the same reward for his useful discovery and was granted the small privilege of a license to sell tobacco.

Othis folly to sit here replained And voicing a valueless wish; When one has finished his diring On fowl, why hanker for fish? My career was planned and chosen As freest from sorrow and strife; Better cold lumbes, yen frozen, Than endless hat stews with a wife. Though I left no rosterity dying, Alive, I'd be happy and free—Strangely tonight I am sighing. There was never a baby for me.

There was never a snoy for me.

Ah, well; I shall manage to trundle Along as the seasons roll by.

To the end; then a useless old bundle Be tossed in the corner to lle.

How I used to mock at this folly.

Resigning their freedom and ease;
But toolgnt I am—pahaw! melancholy.
